"As a location of a former tobacco factory, we wanted to create strong new architecture that picks up on the industrial history of the site, whilst taking considerable care in the restoration of what was already there.

The elegant, traditionally proportioned façades of the existing buildings disguised the industrial tobacco processes that went on behind, and a collection of surprisingly smart and opulent meeting rooms are being transformed into finely proportioned apartments. The new apartment buildings effortlessly blend with the old, yet add a modern twist to the architectural style, and pay homage to the past with names such as Tobacco Store and Cutting Room. Located within the development, for use by the residents, are a series of calming, beautifully landscaped terraces that belie the central city location of Factory No.1."
